MADNESS An ODE.

I.

HENCE ye Prophane, ye puny Slaves retire,
Pretenders to Poetick Fire;
At awful distance gaze, and as ye gaze admire.
See! at one mighty, mighty Sup,
I quaff your boasted Fountain up!
Then mount the Pegasean Steed,
Fiercest of all the Airy Breed;
Attending Muses beg in vain,
That I would strongly hold the Rein;
Loose and uncurb'd I let him go.
Now he descends to tinkling Rills.
Now bounds o'er Pirenean Hills,
And Alpine Mountains ever topt with Snow.

II.

Oh Phaeton! how much I envy thee!
Had thy great Sire but granted me,
To guide the Chariot of the Day,
My Brows encircl'd with his Ray,
How would I lash the Jades! how would I make them flee!
Scorning the dull Advice he gave,
I'd mount the flaming Carr, and Jove himself out-brave.
All ascending would I fly,
Beyond the Stars, beyond the Sky;
I would the Deities amaze,
And set their Heavenly Domes ablaze:
Then with swift Descent I'd go,
And scorch & burn the Worlds below;
Rejoicing in the Ruins I had wrought.
Such Pleasure could not be too dearly bought.
Then with a haughty Smile I could expire,
While Nature made my Funeral Fire:
Grant me but this, ye Gods, 'tis all Mad Tom's Desire.

III.

This might have been, had but your Power design'd
A Fortune equal to my Mind:
But Jove, perhaps, was jealous of his Throne,
And curb'd my State, lest I should shake his own.
But all you groveling Slaves below,
Bow down, adore me as I go.
Not Phœbus self can touch the Lyre,
With half the Warmth, with half the Fire:
I see him blush for Shame, I see the God retire.
But Hark! 'tis I that strike the String!
What glorious Subject shall I sing?
What glorious Subject can there be,
That's worthy Verse, and worthy me!
Almighty Madness! hail! I fix my Choice on thee.

IV.

Madness, by Heavens, 'tis all the Difference
Betwixt the Fool and Man of Sense.
What is this Spark of intellectual Fire,
That doth politer Souls inspire,
Old Science to improve, or new ones to acquire?
'Tis Madness in a less degree:
But could they rove and bound like me,
To no one Chain of Thought confin'd,
But grasp at all with daring Mind;
How much more glorious were their Destiny!
But Heroes rise not every Day,
Who shine with such exalted Ray:
Perhaps there's not an Age to come
Shall know a Rival to your Lord mad Tom
What tho' I dictate all my Law,
Though Iron-Grates, from Thrones of Straw;
Dress'd in a tatter'd ragged Robe:
Yet let your haughtiest Monarchs know,
A Madman is a God below;
And none but Madmen ever rul'd the Globe.

V.

'Tis not for every crack-brain'd Wretch to claim
This great, this elevated Name.
Avarus owes his Discontent
To Money-Baggs, and Cent. per Cent.
Narcissus, fond of Pomp and Shew,
In dirty Rags assumes the Beau.
Bedlam, I own, can shew you Crowds like these;
But 'tis a general Disease,
And Coxcombs may be found where-e'er you please.
Madness is quite a different thing,
The brightest Glory of a King;
Does all the Hero's Soul inspire,
With sacred Warmth, with sacred Fire.
No sudden Flash, no lambent Flame,
But ever, ever, shines the same.
Vast Ideas round us rowl!
Vast Ideas swell the Soul!
No Damps disturb us, nor no Moons controul.

VI.

What are your Histories of Heroes past,
Whose Memories shall ever last,
But Tales of mighty Madmen gone;
Such as was Philip's Warlike Son,
The great, the glorious Macedon.
How did he all Triumphant go,
Where Indus, Ganges, and Hydaspes flow:
No Bounds his towering Genius could confine,
But greatly did the Madman shine,
In every thing he did, in Arms, in Love, in Wine.
Yet the Youth whose generous Breast,
Was still by great Ambition prest,
Scorning mean inglorious Rest;

Some

Some manly Tears let fall:
Thus to his Father Jove he pray'd,
And thus in haughty Accents said,
Grant me more Worlds, or grant me none at all.
To such as he, the Trump of Fame
Is proud to give a lasting Name,
And shall to future Worlds, and list'ning Crowds proclaim.

VII.

The best Philosophy you have below,
Did from this great Archeus flow;
Copernicus, who rightly did condemn
The Ptolomean elder Scheme,
And in the Center fixt the flaming God,
Was first by Inspiration taught;
Reason could never dart a Light
So true, and yet so dazling bright!
'Twas Jove himself the mighty Frenzy wrought,
The glorious Energy of Thought;
Shew'd him the System, which himself had chose,
When erst he Chaos put to Flight,
And out of Darkness call'd up Light,
And thousand glittering Worlds from dark Confusion rose.

VIII.

Why do I thus my self and Theme disgrace,
With Instances of Humane Race?
Would you Imperial Madness see
Lift up your Eyes, and gaze on me!
On me your Sovereign Lord, for soon,
No more I'll shine beneath the Moon;
For me the willing Gods prepare,
A loftier Throne in Realms of Air;
Satellites shall round me wait,
And I become a part of Fate:
Yet PHILADELPHIA, if she please, may know,
When e'er I rise, where e'er I go;
On her my choicest Influence shall shine,
And all my Aspects be benign:
Above the Neighbouring Lands her Fame I'll raise,
And give her endless Peace, and Halcyon Days.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

BELGRADE, April 19.

The Body of Turkish Troops, who begun their March by the Way of Parakin, in order to attack Rawna and Jagodina, actually encamp on the other Side of the Morava. The 8000 Turks who were detached from Bosnia, in Order to besiege Sabatsch, have taken Post in the Neighbourhood of that Fortress, and are disposing every thing for beginning the Siege, as soon as the Waters of the Saave are a little lower, and they receive the Artillery which they expect from Bosnia; but as the Imperial Army is on the Point of Marching, the Infidels may probably be obliged to retire before they put their design in Execution, and we foresee that this Campaign will be a very bloody one.

Vienna, April 26. Yesterday the Court set out for Laxembourg. We have heard nothing these several Days past relating to the Veldt Marshal Count Seckendorff, tho' we were assured that this Affair was to be decided before the Emperor's Departure to Laxembourg. Neither have we had News, these three last Posts, of the Conspiracy which it is pretended has been discovered in Transylvania; this Circumstance makes us believe that the Alarm was taken too hastily on that Head, inasmuch as we are assured, that the Account of several Gentlemen having been arrested in that Province, is without Foundation. We have various Advices from Hungary, concerning the Movement of the Turks: Our Letters from Belgrade of the 16th Inst. make no mention of the taking of Semendria, nor of the Blockade of Orsova and Vipalanka; it is true they say, that the Infidels took two or three open Places in Imperial Servia, but that they have abandoned them since, at the Approach of the Imperial Troops, who were sent to drive them from thence: However all these Letters agree, that the Enemy is making great Preparations for a Siege.

Edinburgh, April 25. We hear from St. Andrews, that last Week died, Sir James Sharp of Stonyhill, Bart. Grandson of the Archbishop of St. Andrews of that Name.

From Paisley, That Wednesday last Mr. Banatyne, Chaplain in Brigadier General Campbell's Family, was ordained, by the Rev. Presbytery, a Minister of the Church of Scotland, in order to his being appointed Chaplain to the said Brigadier's Regiment of Royal Scots Gray Dragoons. And that on Thursday, the Rev. Presbytery of Glascow, did ordain and settle Mr George Adam as Minister of Carheart, with great Harmony.

Early last Tuesday Morning, two married Women, of this City, stept out to Burntsfield Links, to a concerted Match at Golf, followed by their Husbands carrying the Clubs. Curiosity led thither a great Crowd, who were charmed with seeing the half naked Viragoes tilt the Balls so manfully, and their Dexterity in holeing. Considerable Wages were laid; but Charming Sally carried the Prize.

And, Thomas Baillie and William Moer, Farmers at Gogar, in the Parish of Corstorphine, both aged above 80, play'd a Match at the long-Bullets, (each Bullet a Pound-weight heavier than the ordinary ones) for a considerable Sum; the former gained the Prize, tho' the eldest by two Years. However nothing could be more surprising, than to see the stout brawny Trojans play with the Vigour of Batchelors at 30.

Bristol, April 29. Capt. Kerley, of the Expedition, who is arrived at Plymouth from the Cape de Verds, met the 11th Inst. about 200 Leagues to the Westward of the Land, the Vine, Capt. Hall, laden with Logwood, just sinking, having foundered, and the Crew, being 17 in Number, in the utmost Despair; as soon as they saw Capt. Kerley they made a Signal, upon which he hoisted out his Boat and took them on Board, and used them in a very kind Manner.

LONDON, May 2. Letters of the 15th of January from Carthagena in America say, that some Ships are fitting out there to cruize along the Spanish Coasts; and that the Fair is not like to begin at Porto Bello till towards September next, because according to their last Advices from Lima, the Ships that were to carry the Treasure from thence to Panama, were not yet ready to sail, notwithstanding the earnest Instances of the Viceroy of Peru to hasten their Departure.

May 5. Extract of a Letter from Amstedam.

" It appears by the Conduct of the Spanish Minister at the Court of Great Britain, that he does not expect to continue there long. He seems to endeavour to have it believed, that in case of an open War between Great Britain and Spain, the latter will be assisted by France. What Grounds he may have for such a Supposition is uncertain: But Spain, if a Rupture should happen, will undoubtedly want Assistance, being in no Degree a Match for Great Britain, especially by Sea, this latter having equipped 30 Men of War, which are mann'd with People whose highest Pleasure it would be to engage with the Spaniards. The British Court is under no Apprehensions of the French so far taking the Part of Spain, as to enter into a War on her behalf. It has very good Assurance that the pacifick Cardinal will not engage the King of France into a War, which from his Eminency's Age and Infirmities he would have but a faint Prospect of seeing finish'd: Wherefore the Court of Great Britain now seems resolv'd to oblige the King of Spain to renounce all Projects of Reunion, particularly that which would be so prejudicial to the Honour of the British Nation, the Reunion of Gibraltar and Minorca, to his Crown, which would greatly have totter'd, if it had not quite drop'd off, unless he had thought proper by several preceeding Treaties, to confirm the Possession of these Places to Great Britain. We find the News of a Convention between the Emperor and France, for yielding to the latter the Austrian Luxembourg, and some other Places of the Low-Countries, but too true, notwithstanding the many Declarations of their Imperial and most Christian Majesties to the contrary; who always protested, that the Treaty of Vienna contain'd nothing contrary to foregoing Treaties, and that was in the least Prejudicial to the States General."
